

Should schools require their students to wear school uniforms?

Have you ever wondered why students wear uniforms? There are several reasons why I think schools should require students to wear uniforms. Now I will tell you why.

Well, I think schools should require students to wear school uniforms.

Requiring students to wear school uniforms can be a way to save money for the students in their families. While School uniforms' initial expense of purchasing uniforms might be high, the overall cost can be lower compared to buying a wide variety of trendy clothes regularly. Additionally, the materials that uniforms tend to be made with are usually durable so you can rely on them for a long time. In most schools, there are uniform donation programs from graduated seniors, so the students who are hard to afford school uniforms can get help too.(Nord Anglia / April 24, 2023)

Wearing school uniforms can help students to study. It might be uncomfortable on some occasions like playing sports, but school uniforms help students whole while they're studying. For example, If everyone is wearing different clothes and some students wear colorful clothes, students can easily disturbed to focus on studying. The school uniforms can also prevent bullying based on clothings or economic background and give positive feelings of being socially accepted. So school uniforms give students the ability to focus on studying well and feel comfortable in the school environment.

Furthermore, School uniforms can save children from unnecessary bullying and peer pressure. Since people use clothing to express themselves, sadly, in some cases, when a child expresses themselves in a distinctive way to everyone else, it can create a point of difference between one child and another. These differences can be amplified by social and economic disparities between one child's family and another.(Nord Anglia,posted on 24 April, 2023) Rather than build a sense of community and equality with a school uniform, allowing children to wear what they like can create divisions between them.And this might increase the chance of student bullying. Uniforms help maintain a sense of order in the school, give students a sense of belonging, and take away the competition for clothing. It helps the school's organization and tranquility. Lastly,uniforms give the school and students more comfort. For example, if some students have expensive and nice clothes, the ones who don't have those nice clothes will feel very gloomy whenever they come to school. This can lead to bullying between students. So if you take a look at the advantages of school uniforms, there is no reason to not require a student to wear a school uniform. So for all these reasons, I would like to say schools requiring students to wear uniforms is very helpful and important. But, sadly, there are downsides to everything. Even uniforms couldn't pass by. One of the claims is that there is not enough information about the claim that school uniforms truly prevent bullying in school. The point is “Will these bullies stop just because every student is wearing the same clothes?”. Kids can be bullied for many other reasons such as their color, race, gender, and even what they look like and how they act. Students who like to bully others will still find their own reasons to bully someone. And there is another claim that there is not enough evidence or information that uniforms help students’ academic performance.Some people would argue that uniforms give a mindset for students to study, but there isn’t actual evidence or information that supports this idea. Why would students’ grades differ by just wearing certain clothes? (by Santoshbhatt / written at Feb 17, 2023)
